F This was an appeal against the decision of the High Court wherein the appellant's ('plaintiff's) suit for defamation ('suit') was dismissed after a full trial. The plaintiff was the chairman and founder of Malaysia Land Properties Sdn Bhd ('Mayland') which developed Waldorf & Windsor Towers Service Apartments ('W&W'). The respondent ('defendant') was a unit owner of property at W&W and was, at various points in time, a committee or sub-committee member of the W&W Management G Corporation ('MC'). Mayland and the MC were involved in several legal actions. W&W was involved in the suits ('Mayland litigation') where various issues and matters between W&W and Mayland, its related entities or individuals connected to the Mayland group were litigated or were in the midst of litigation. The defendant and 55 other unit owners were part of a H WhatsApp group. The WhatsApp was the platform to enable unit owners to disseminate and discuss all matters and issues of and concerning the MC and in particular, matters concerning the MC's legal disputes with Mayland and its associates. The gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint was that the defendant had defamed him and injured his reputation as a businessman of I international repute by publishing a 'half-truth' via a text message in the WhatsApp group. The impugned text message contained serious allegations which were directed at Mayland, the plaintiff and his family members and the Chiu family. There was no dispute that sometime in the 1980s, the plaintiff and his father were arrested and charged for offences involving financial misconduct in Hong Kong. Later, around 1996, the plaintiff and his father were 'acquitted.' These facts were in the public domain. The plaintiff pleaded that the impugned text sent by the defendant, in its ordinary and natural meaning, meant that the plaintiff was, inter alia, a fraudster, was dishonest and untrustworthy and had been of convicted of fraud and had served jail time. The plaintiff prayed for, inter alia, damages of RM1.5 million or general damages including aggravated damages to be assessed. The defendant's defence was that the impugned text was not defamatory of the plaintiff. If it was defamatory, the defendant pleaded that (i) the impugned text was justified and/or based on information that was available in the public domain; (ii) made in good faith, not in malice; (iii) made as a matter of fair comment in the interest of the participants of the WhatsApp group and/or that it was published on an occasion of privilege and for the benefit of the participants in the WhatsApp group. The defendant maintained that her focus was on Mayland and that the words in the impugned text referring to the plaintiff were true as the plaintiff himself had, in the past, been arrested and charged for criminal offences, which was publicly reported in the press which was used by the defendant as the source of her text. The defendant pleaded the defence of justification, qualified privilege and fair comment. The JC, in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, held that the impugned text was not defamatory and that there was a need to raise awareness and for the W&W owners to be informed of the 'players' in the Mayland litigation. Hence, this appeal.

Held (allowing appeal)
Per S Nantha Balan JCA delivering the judgment of the court:

(1) The defendant was fully aware that the plaintiff was 'acquitted' of the charges of financial misconduct and that these events occurred at least two decades ago. There was no rhyme or reason for the defendant to have 'raked' up the plaintiff's past in connection with the arrest and charge, which ultimately resulted in an acquittal. The defendant was fully aware that the plaintiff had been acquitted of the charges involving financial misconduct but she chose not to disclose this to the participants in the WhatsApp group. She painted only 'half' the picture. Therein lay the element of malice on the defendant's part. The non-disclosure of the plaintiff's acquittal was deliberate and this was hardly 'fair' to the plaintiff. The defendant had displayed an indifferent attitude which significantly warranted an inference of malice. In the circumstances, the finding of malice on the defendant's part demolished the defence of qualified privilege and fair comment. (paras 30-33)

(2) The facts pertaining to the arrest and charge against the plaintiff were carefully juxtaposed with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland and this was a clear and unmistakable invitation to the participants of the WhatsApp group to equate the plaintiff with Mayland, and to reasonably form the view that the plaintiff was dishonest and a fraudster with a criminal heritage. The impugned text was circulated on 17 August 2018 when the plaintiff's arrest (and that of his father) took place in the late 1980s and both were acquitted in 1996. These were facts which were in the public domain and were known to the defendant before she sent the impugned text. The impugned text as a whole gave the clear impression that the plaintiff was guilty, liable for, or predisposed to dishonesty, fraud or misrepresentation. Therein lay the 'sting' of the impugned text. The impugned text here was not 'mere reporting.' Rather, it was a well scripted text with a clear purpose to impugn the plaintiff's reputation so that the participants of the WhatsApp group form the view that the plaintiff and Mayland were one and the same and that just as Mayland was found liable for fraud and misrepresentation, the plaintiff too was dishonest and a fraudster as he had been arrested and charged with offences involving financial misconduct. (paras 36, 37, 48 & 54)

(3) Whilst it was legitimate for the defendant to discuss Mayland's conduct, behaviour, misconduct or other unlawful activity, the action of the defendant to equate the plaintiff with Mayland and ascribe or impute Mayland's wrongful conduct to the plaintiff by reason of his previous arrest and criminal charge, of which he was acquitted and which was not mentioned in the impugned text, rendered the impugned text to be inherently and egregiously defamatory of the plaintiff. The defendant had knowledge or means of knowledge that the statement she made about the plaintiff was only a half-truth. What the defendant did was merely to insert a so-called 'disclaimer' at the end of the posting by asking the recipients to 'Google' these names to read more. This is nothing more than posting a half-truth and asking the readers to look out for themselves, the other half on Google. The disclaimer did not give the defendant a free pass such that it exonerated her from liability for having defamed the plaintiff. The omission to paint the full picture was the very nature and essence of the concept of 'half-truth' which established liability for defamation in circumstances where the failure to present the requisite information portrayed a false impression in the minds of the ordinary person. (paras 62-66)

(4) Firstly, the defendant failed to give the full picture of the plaintiff's previous legal problems in Hong Kong, and secondly, the plaintiff's previous legal problems in Hong Kong being juxtaposed with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland gave the false impression that the plaintiff was a fraudster and was dishonest. Thirdly, there was no legitimate reason or justification for making any reference to the plaintiff in the impugned text. It was done for the obvious purpose of highlighting Mayland's unlawful conduct and to equate the plaintiff with Mayland, and in the process to malign the reputation of the plaintiff. Even if the fact that the plaintiff was previously arrested and charged was true, the defence of justification failed as the impression created by the impugned text was one of utter falsity. The mere mention of the plaintiff's name in the impugned text and juxtaposing the plaintiff's name together with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland had the effect of tarnishing the plaintiff's reputation. The plaintiff was defamed because the words used in the impugned article which referred to the plaintiff's arrest and charge had taken a sinister colour by being associated with the other words in the same impugned text relating to Mayland. (paras 67-70)

(5) The impugned text was circulated to a limited group – within the W&W WhatsApp group. Since the administrator of the WhatsApp group had administered a rebuke to the defendant about ten days after the impugned text was circulated, it might be presumed that it was or may have been deleted. At any rate, there was no evidence of any 're-publication.' Taking all circumstances into account, the plaintiff was not entitled to RM1.5 million damages as pleaded. Considering the plaintiff's status as an international businessman and that the impugned text was not widely circulated, damages in the sum of RM100,000 would be fair and reasonable to vindicate the plaintiff's reputation which had been sullied by the impugned text. JUDGMENT

S Nantha Balan JCA:

Introduction

[1] This is an appeal against the decision of the learned Judicial Commissioner of the High Court ("the JC") dated 23 June 2021 wherein the plaintiff's suit for defamation per Kuala Lumpur High Court Suit No. WA-23CY-10-03/2018 ("the suit") was dismissed after a full trial. The plaintiff in the suit (appellant before us) is Tan Sri David Chiu Tat-Cheong and the defendant is Mdm Seema Elizabeth Isoy. The JC ordered costs of RM80,000 (subject to allocator) to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. The High Court's decision is reported as – Tan Sri David Chiu Tat-Cheong v Seema Elizabeth Isoy [2021] 1 LNS 1162; [2021] 7 AMR 186 (HC). For convenience, the appellant and respondent in this appeal shall be referred to as plaintiff and defendant respectively.

The Issue

[2] The issue is whether the publication of a "half-truth" can constitute a false statement. In this regard, at para. [9] of the memorandum of appeal dated 17 September 2021, the plaintiff has contended that the JC had erred "in law and/or in fact in failing to hold that the publication of a half-truth constitutes a false statement."

Parties

[3] The plaintiff is the chairman and founder of Malaysia Land Properties Sdn Bhd ("Mayland") which developed Waldorf & Windsor Towers Service Apartments ("W&W").

[4] The defendant is a unit owner of property at W&W and was at various points in time, a committee or sub-committee member of the W&W Management Corporation ("MC"). A

Mayland Litigation

[5] Mayland and the MC were involved in several legal actions. W&W is and was involved in the following suits ("Mayland litigation") in which the opposing parties are Mayland, its related entities or individuals connected to the Mayland group: B

(i) Kuala Lumpur High Court Civil Suit No. 22NCvC-460-2011 between Mayland and W&W Joint Management Body ("JMB"); C

(ii) Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. W-02(NCvC)(W)-1150-05/2012 between Mayland and the JMB;

(iii) Federal Court Civil Application No. 08(f)-260-04/2013(W) between Mayland and the JMB; D

(iv) Kuala Lumpur High Court Civil Suit No. 22NCvC-13-01/2014 between various apartment owners and Mayland;

(v) Kuala Lumpur High Court Civil Suit No. WA-22NCvC-298-06/2017 between a Mayland connected person and the MC; E

(vi) Kuala Lumpur High Court Civil Suit No. WA-22NCvC-374-07/2017 between the MC and Mayland;

(vii) Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. W-02(IM)(NCvC)-1918-09/2017 between Mayland connected persons and the MC; F

(viii) Kuala Lumpur High Court Application for Judicial Review No. WA-25-323-12/2017 between a Mayland connected person, the MC and Datuk Bandar Kuala Lumpur; and

(ix) Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. W-02(IM)(NCvC)-1454-07/2017 between a Mayland connected person and the MC. G

[6] In relation to the Mayland litigation, various issues and matters between W&W and Mayland, its related entities or individuals connected to the Mayland group were litigated or are in the midst of litigation, including:

(i) the JMB successfully reclaiming a substantial portion of the 7th floor of W&W from Mayland who had been found guilty of fraud and/or false misrepresentation in obtaining the title to the same. Mayland was found to have perpetrated fraud and/or false misrepresentation at the land office and JUPEM (the Malaysian Department of Survey and Mapping); H

(ii) 47 W&W owners initiating a class action against Mayland seeking compensation for costs incurred in renovating the unfinished portion of the 7th floor of W&W; I

(iii) the MC claiming unpaid contribution of maintenance fees and sinking fund (approximately RM1 million) against a Mayland connected person in respect of 414 parking bays linked to one residential apartment unit at W&W and operated as a commercial car park;

(iv) the MC obtaining an interim injunction to remove proxies of Mayland and its related entities from holding positions in the W&W Management Committee due to irregularities at the 2017 AGM which contravened the laws on strata management. Had this injunction not been granted, the W&W Management Committee would have consisted solely of three proxies of Mayland and its related entities; and

(v) the MC successfully appealing the injunction that had been granted which had allowed a Mayland related entity to attend the 2017 AGM.

WhatsApp Group

[7] The defendant and 55 other unit owners were part of a WhatsApp group. The administrator of the WhatsApp group at the material time was one Mr Curtis Brinton ("Curtis"). Curtis did not testify at the trial. WhatsApp was the platform to enable unit owners to disseminate and discuss all matters and issues of and concerning the MC and in particular, matters concerning the MC's legal disputes with Mayland and its associates.

[8] It is not in dispute that in one of the legal actions, the High Court made a finding that Mayland had defrauded and/or made false representations to W&W owners in respect of a common area in W&W. On appeal, the Court of Appeal upheld the High Court's findings. The judgment of the Court of Appeal is reported as Malaysia Land Properties Sdn Bhd v. Waldorf & Windsor Joint Management Body [2014] 6 CLJ 821 (CA). The legal action arose out of a dispute between MC and Mayland regarding the whole of the 7th floor of W&W.

[9] Mayland contended that the 7th floor was privately owned by them and was not part of common property. The MC contended otherwise and sought a declaration that area "A" of the 7th floor which was registered in Mayland's name was not indefeasible under s. 340 of the National Land Code 1965. The Court of Appeal upheld the High Court's finding that area "A" of the 7th floor was common property and that Mayland had obtained the strata title through fraud and/or misrepresentation perpetuated on the land office and the Jabatan Ukur dan Pemetaan Malaysia (JUPEM), being the issuing authority. (See para. 55(k) of the Court of Appeal's judgment).

[10] Mayland's leave to appeal to the Federal Court was subsequently dismissed.

[11] In 2021, the High Court has made a similar finding against Mayland, now in respect of 414 carparks which were unlawfully obtained. The matter is pending appeal at the Court of Appeal.

[12] Hence, it is quite clear that in light of the findings of fraud and misrepresentation made by the High Court and Court of Appeal against Mayland, any suit by Mayland for defamation based on any publication which attributes fraud and false misrepresentation against Mayland vis-a-vis the 7th floor of W&W Tower would be an exercise in futility as the suit will be defeated by the defence of justification. In the present case, there was no suit by Mayland for defamation. Rather, the defamation suit is by the plaintiff who is the chairman and founder of Mayland.

Half-truth

[13] The gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint is that the defendant had defamed him and injured his reputation as a businessman of international repute by publishing a "half-truth" via a text message in the WhatsApp group. The impugned text message contained serious allegations which were directed at Mayland, the plaintiff, his family members and the Chiu family. There is no dispute that sometime in the 1980s, the plaintiff and his father were arrested and charged for offences involving financial misconduct in Hong Kong. Later, around 1996, the plaintiff and his father were "acquitted". These facts are in the public domain.

Impugned Text

[14] The impugned text message dated 17 August 2018 at 22:15:14 and 22:16:22 ("impugned text") is as pleaded:

> In order for owners to know all the facts, I believe we have to step back even more and ask "Who is Mayland?"
> Mayland is the CHIU family.
> So who is this Chiu family?
> Let's have a very brief look at the publicly known facts about this family:
> - The Chiu family is an extremely rich and successful family originating from China, then based in Hong Kong. Now with business in many countries, including Malaysia.
> I'm always happy for people's happiness and good fortune but ...
> - Deacon Chiu (Sr) has been in the past arrested and charged with conspiracy to falsify documents of the Far East Bank, where they were the major shareholders. For plotting to defraud the Commissioner of Banking by making false claims concerning the ownership of companies to which the bank had made advances of $352.5 million.
> - Duncan Chiu (Deacon Sr's son) has in the past been arrested for allegedly breaching the Theft Ordinance and the Companies Ordinance.

A • David Chiu (Deacon Sr's son) has been in the past arrested and charged for the same offenses as Deacon Sr. He also faced charges of conspiring to falsify documents purporting to show that more than $246 million in credit facilities had been granted to the bank by various companies.

And now the climax to this family saga:

B • The same don (David Chiu) is the Founder and Chairman of Mayland!!!

Mayland has been convicted of Fraud and Misrepresentation against W&W owners:
At High Court level
At Court of Appeal level
At Federal Court level

C The apple doesn't fall far from the tree …

Please google these names to read more.

*the same son (emphasis added)

[15] The defendant almost immediately corrected the word "don" which D appeared in the first version of the impugned text to read as "son". During the trial, the plaintiff accepted that the word "don" was a typographical error and that it should read as "son". Thus, there is no basis for the plaintiff to say that the defendant had sought to portray the plaintiff as a "don" which is a euphemism for "head of a mafia" or the head of a criminal enterprise E or organisation.

Defamation – Ordinary And Natural Meaning

[16] The plaintiff pleaded that the impugned text, in its ordinary and natural meaning, meant and was understood to mean that:

F (i) plaintiff is a fraudster;

(ii) plaintiff is a fraudster because of his family heritage;

(iii) plaintiff is dishonest and untrustworthy because of his family heritage;

(iv) plaintiff has been convicted of fraud;

G (v) plaintiff has committed fraud against W&W owners;

(vi) plaintiff has misrepresented to W&W owners;

(vii) plaintiff was convicted of fraud at the High Court level;

H (viii) plaintiff was convicted of fraud at the Court of Appeal level;

(ix) plaintiff was convicted of fraud at the Federal Court level; and

(x) plaintiff is a Don and is associated with the criminals or underworld.

Defamation – Innuendo Meaning

I [17] The plaintiff further pleaded that the impugned text, by way of innuendo, was to be understood to mean that:

(i) plaintiff is dishonest and untrustworthy;

(ii) plaintiff has committed fraud and misrepresentation;

(iii) plaintiff comes from a family of fraudsters or criminals;

(iv) plaintiff was convicted because of fraud committed against W&W owners;

(v) plaintiff was convicted because of misrepresentation against W&W owners; and

(vi) plaintiff has served jail time.

Reliefs

[18] In the statement of claim, plaintiff prayed for the following reliefs:

(i) damages of RM1.5 million or general damages including aggravated damages to be assessed;

(ii) an order that defendant publishes an apology in leading Chinese newspaper, English newspaper and Bahasa Malaysia newspaper for a period of 14 days consecutively; and

(iii) an injunction to restrain the defendant from publishing or spreading the impugned text or similar defamatory words.

Defence

[19] The defendant's defence was that the impugned text was not defamatory of the plaintiff.

[20] And if it is defamatory, then the defendant pleads that (i) the same was justified and/or based on information that was available in the public domain, (ii) made in good faith, not in malice, (iii) made as a matter of fair comment in the interest of the participants of the WhatsApp group and/or that it was published on an occasion of privilege and for the benefit of the participants in the WhatsApp group.

[21] In so far justification is concerned, the defendant pleaded at para. [9] of the re-amended defence as follows:

(i) the Chiu family is indeed an extremely rich and successful family originating from China, then based in Hong Kong and who has businesses in many countries, including Malaysia;

(ii) the individuals known as Deacon Chiu (Sr), Duncan Chiu and David Chiu (the plaintiff) have been arrested and charged with criminal offences in the past. These offences were, inter alia, in respect of corporate crimes such as conspiracy to defraud and falsify documents;

(iii) Deacon Chiu (Sr) has indeed been accused in the past of plotting to defraud the Commissioner of Banking by making false claims concerning the ownership of companies to which the bank had made advances of $352.5 million. Deacon Chiu (Sr) had also faced charges

A of conspiring to falsify documents purporting to show that more than $246 million in credit facilities had been granted to the bank by various companies;

(iv) Duncan Chiu has been arrested for allegedly breaching the theft ordinance and the companies' ordinance in the past;

B

(v) the plaintiff comes from the said Chiu family;

(vi) the plaintiff himself had been accused of involvement in the conspiracy (as pleaded in para. 9(iii) above); and/or

C (vii) the plaintiff is the founder and chairman of Mayland. Mayland was found liable for fraud and false misrepresentation against W&W. This was litigated all the way up to the Federal Court.

[22] The issue is whether what was published was a "half-truth" and whether it amounts to "no truth" ie, falsity. In Lim Guan Eng v. Utusan D Melayu (M) Bhd [2012] 2 CLJ 619; [2012] 2 MLJ 394, (at p. 642 (CLJ); p. 415 (MLJ) Varghese George J (as he then was – later JCA) said:

> Half truths are no truth at all and definitely bear out an intention to deliberately mislead and malign unfairly the party who was the subject of such statement, in this case, the plaintiff.

E [23] The defendant maintains that her focus was on Mayland and that the words in the impugned text referring to the plaintiff are true as the plaintiff himself had, in the past, been arrested and charged for criminal offences, which was publicly reported both in the press and through Hong Kong legal journals which was used by the defendant as the source of her text. The F defendant pleaded the defence of justification, qualified privilege and fair comment.

Defamatory Test

[24] The test for determining whether the words appearing in the impugned G text are defamatory may be seen from the decision of Harminder JC (now FCJ) in Dato' Seri Anwar Ibrahim v. The New Straits Times Press (M) Sdn Bhd & Anor [2010] 5 CLJ 301; [2010] 2 MLJ 492, [2009] MLJU 1353, [2010] 3 AMR 514 (HC) where the learned judge referred to the principles in the following paragraphs:

H [13] The Defamation Act 1957 is silent on what constitutes defamatory matter. The courts have followed closely the law in England. Even then there is no single, uniform or comprehensive definition of what constitutes defamatory matter.

[14] In Syed Husin Ali v. Sharikat Penchetakan Utusan Melayu Berhad & Anor I [1973] 2 MLJ 56 at p. 58, Mohd Azmi J (as he then was) set out the defamatory test as follows:

> Thus, the test of defamatory nature of a statement is its tendency to excite against the plaintiff the adverse opinion of others, although no one believes the statement to be true. Another test is: would the words tend to lower the plaintiff in the estimation of right-thinking members of society generally? The typical type of defamation is an attack upon the moral character of the plaintiff attributing crime, dishonesty, untruthfulness, ingratitude or cruelty.

[15] In Tun Datuk Patinggi Haji Abdul-Rahman Ya'kub v. Bre Sdn Bhd & Ors [1996] 1 MLJ 393, Richard Malanjum J (as he then was) followed JB Jeyaretnam v. Goh Chok Thong [1985] 1 MLJ 334 and adopted the following approach:

> As to whether the words complained of in this case were capable of being, and were in fact, defamatory of the plaintiff, the test to be considered is whether the words complained of were calculated to expose him to hatred, ridicule or contempt in the mind of a reasonable man or would tend to lower the plaintiff in the estimation of right-thinking members of society generally.

[16] The Court of Appeal also had occasion to deal with this issue in Chok Foo Choo @ Chok Kee Lian v. The China Press Bhd [1999] 1 MLJ 371 at p 374. Speaking for the Court, Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as he then was) said:

> In my judgment, the test which is to be applied lies in the question: do the words published in their natural and ordinary meaning impute to the plaintiff any dishonorable or discreditable conduct or motives or a lack of integrity on his part? If the question invites an affirmative response, then the words complained of are defamatory.

[20] The defamatory nature of an imputation also cannot be judged in isolation. It has to be ascertained by reference to the moral or social standards of society generally. This is an important part of the consideration of what constitutes defamatory matter. Such societal standards are not amenable to evidentiary proof. It will be up to the judges to consider the requisite standards when determining whether a matter is either capable of being defamatory or is in fact defamatory. The case law suggests that the standard that is usually adopted is that of ordinary reasonable people (see Jones v. Skelton [1963] SR (NSW) 644) who are of fair average intelligence (see Slatyer v. Daily Telegraph Newspaper Co Ltd (1908) 6 CLR 1 at p 7) but who are not avid for scandal (see Lewis v. Daily Telegraph Ltd [1964] AC 234 at p 260).

This person may engage in some degree of loose thinking (see Morgan v. Odhams Press Ltd [1971] 2 All ER 1156 at p 1162) or reading between the lines (see Farquhar v. Bottom [1980] 2 NSWLR 374 at p 380) but he or she should not be unduly suspicious (see Keogh v. Incorporated Dental Hospital of Ireland (1910) 2 Ir R 577). As such, an ordinary reasonable person would presume that a man is innocent until proven guilty although the reality might sometimes be otherwise. This is necessary to protect the media who go no further than merely to report that a person is being investigated by police or has been arrested and charged with a criminal offence.

[29] The sting of these statements was to show that the plaintiff had abused his political position for personal gain. Ordinary right-thinking members of society will think that here is a person with no integrity, dishonest, corrupt and an untrustworthy leader and politician. It is safe to conclude that the effect of the article would certainly lower the plaintiff in the estimation of ordinary, right-thinking members of Malaysian society. There would certainly be some degree of hatred, contempt or ridicule. I was therefore persuaded that the impugned article was indeed defamatory. (emphasis added)

High Court

[25] As stated earlier, the JC held that the impugned text was not defamatory of the plaintiff. The following parts of the JC's grounds of judgment deal with the issue whether the impugned text is defamatory and they read as follows:

[22] I find that the impugned text is not defamatory of P when read in totality and as a whole. The natural and ordinary meaning or imputation of the impugned text is that:

(a) there are a number of individuals in the Chiu family, including P, who have been arrested and charged for alleged or purported crimes;

(b) this was in the past;

(c) P is the founder and Chairman of Mayland;

(d) Mayland has been found guilty of fraud and misrepresentation against W&W owners by the Malaysian courts.

[23] The aforesaid was stated as a matter of listed and observable facts, divorced from emotion or speculation. And D went no further than that. Hence I conclude that no defamatory imputation can be accorded to the impugned text.

[24] I am of the opinion that the impugned text does not, expressly or impliedly, convey the meanings pleaded by P:

(a) The words "fraud", "fraudster", "dishonest", "untrustworthy", "misrepresented", "convicted" or any other words inferring the like were never used in relation to P. There is no imputation that P has served jail time because of conviction. The impugned text only conveys the meaning that Mayland was found guilty of fraud and misrepresentation against W&W owners.

(b) The impugned text conveys that three persons from the same family have been arrested and charged in the past. But this cannot mean that P is a fraudster or criminal by heritage. A reasonable reader would not believe or give credence to the imputations alleged by P. To do so would be a fallacy and unnatural leap in logic.

(c) The word "don" was mentioned initially. But it was a typo and immediately thereafter corrected to "son". A reasonable reader would understand and know this. The words "criminal" or "underworld" were never mentioned, nor can it be inferred.

[25] D explained that she had used an asterisk (*) to correct the word "the same don" to "the same son" as soon as she realised the misspelling. This is a common way of correcting a misspelling on WhatsApp. The letters "s" and "d" are next to each other on the mobile phone keypad used in the WhatsApp application. I believe this explanation which sounded plausible. Moreover, the correction was done in the space of a minute. Namely at 10:16 p.m. The initial message was sent at 10:15 p.m.

[26] Actually, P and his counsel conceded this point during cross-examination:

Q: … My question is, do you agree with my suggestion that the asterisk followed by the words, "the same son" is there to correct the phrase "the same don". Or you don't know?

A: I think so, yes.

Q: Ok, so you agree?

A: Yes.

A: Yes, I'm the same son. Yes, yes. Ok.

Q: Ok, so he's agreed to it. It's a correction.

P/C: Yang Arif, just for the record, there's no dispute to that. There's no dispute to that.

[27] The impugned text was reproduced in the SOC and in P's witness statement (at Q&A 17) in its incomplete form. Namely, without the correction in asterisk of "don" to "son". This unduly skews and colours the perception of the impugned text. Without "don", there can be no potential imputation of P being a criminal in the underworld.

[28] Throughout the impugned text, clear words were used to distinguish P's arrest and charges, and the finding of fraud made against Mayland. When speaking of P, D's words were "in the past arrested and charged", "faced charges" and "purporting". This is to be distinguished from the wording used when it comes to Mayland which were "has been convicted of fraud and misrepresentation".

[29] The dichotomy of the wording must be taken into account as P was clearly referred to in a way that was different and distinguishable from Mayland. Hence any imputation of fraud, dishonesty, untrustworthiness, misrepresentation, conviction and such like can only be in respect of Mayland, if at all. By virtue of the dichotomy, it cannot be in respect of P.

[32] In my view, the ordinary and natural meaning and innuendo meaning of the impugned text does not impute to P a conduct which is dishonourable or discreditable. It does not tend to lower P in the estimation of right-thinking members of society generally. It does not expose P to ridicule, contempt or hatred. Accordingly, my conclusion is that P has not proven, on a balance of probabilities, that the impugned text is defamatory of him.

Second element — Whether the impugned text refers to plaintiff

[33] Admittedly, the impugned text refers to P. The fourth bullet point stated that P (Deacon Sr's son) has been in the past arrested and charged for the same offences as Deacon Sr. The fifth bullet point stated that the same "son" is the founder and Chairman of Mayland. But as discussed earlier, those words are not defamatory of P.

C

[34] I accept D's explanation that the focus of her WhatsApp text was on Mayland. The WhatsApp group was a private group chat operated in a protected setting. Its purpose was to spread information and awareness of issues and events concerning W&W between W&W owners. There was discussion, feedback and exchange of updates, concerns, opinions, critique, information and documents between the participants.

D

[35] The matters discussed in the WhatsApp group were, amongst others: (a) maintenance and management of W&W, (b) its MC (management corporation), (c) financial and legal matters of W&W, (d) issues affecting W&W or the owners of W&W, (e) raising awareness and rallying the support of the owners of W&W in respect of W&W issues and to participate in AGMs and meeting with the MC, (f) concerns about the possible mismanagement of owners' funds by the MC, (g) concerns about the possible violations of the Strata Management Act by the MC, and (h) suggestions and solutions on how best to resolve W&W issues. This is evident from the thread of messages in the WhatsApp group contained in the bundle of documents.

[36] P complains that the statement "Mayland is the Chiu family" is factually wrong. Because in the Chinese context, Chiu family includes all his siblings and relatives amounting to about 200 people. According to P, a more accurate description would have been "Mayland is David Chiu and family". That may very well be so but I think it is quite irrelevant as the said statement, in any event, is not defamatory.

G

[37] Next, P takes offence at the statement "Mayland has been convicted of Fraud and Misrepresentation against W&W owners". However, that statement does not refer to P but rather to Mayland. And Mayland is not the plaintiff here.

H

[38] As the words referring to P are not defamatory, I find, on a balance of probabilities, that P has failed to prove his case for defamation against D.

I

[26] As for the half-truth issue, the JC said that it was untenable. The JC's reasoning may be gathered from the following paragraphs from the grounds of judgment:

> [84] P's argument of "half-truth" is untenable. Malaysian case laws show that when an allegation is made, an ordinary reasonable reader would understand it to be just an allegation. Stating that P was in the past arrested and charged, which fact and imputation are true, cannot constitute defamation.
> [85] At worse, D might perhaps be said to have been robust and overzealous in sending the impugned text without disclosing that the charges against P were withdrawn. But I think that is mitigated by the disclaimer which invited the readers to do their own research and find out more. Furthermore, robust and even outrageous statements do not negate the fair comment defence.

[27] In so far as dragging the plaintiff into the impugned text is concerned, the JC said there was a need to raise awareness and for the W&W owners to be informed of the "players" in the Mayland litigation. In this regard, the JC said:

> [61] Because of the litigation in which Mayland and its related entities have interests antithetical to W&W owners, there was a need to raise awareness of who and what Mayland was. Particularly in the light of an impending EGM in which collective action of owners would be required. It therefore is a matter of interest, rather than disinterest, for W&W owners to know the players in the litigation matters involving W&W and W&W owners' interests.

Discussion

[28] We shall start with the issue of malice as our finding on this part of the case will deal with the defence of qualified privilege and fair comment. Thus, assuming that the impugned text was defamatory, the JC concluded that there was no malice on the defendant's part which would have defeated the defence of qualified privilege and fair comment. In law, a person would be regarded as being actuated by malice if he was reckless or indifferent to the truth. The judgment of Lord Diplock in Horrocks v. Lowe [1975] AC 135 at p. 150 is instructive on this point. Lord Diplock said:

> if he publishes untrue defamatory matter recklessly, without considering or caring whether it be true or not, he is in this, as in other branches of the law, treated as if he knew it to be false.

[29] In S Pakianathan v. Jenni Ibrahim & Another Case [1988] 1 CLJ 771; [1988] 1 CLJ (Rep) 233; [1988] 2 MLJ 173, Wan Hamzah SCJ (as he then was) discussed the topic of malice in the following terms:

> Where the defendant purposely abstained from inquiring into the facts or from availing himself of means of information which lay at hand when

A the slightest inquiry would have shown the true situation, or where he deliberately stopped short in his inquiries in order not to ascertain the truth, malice may rightly be inferred.

[30] Here, the defendant was fully aware that the plaintiff was "acquitted" of the charges of financial misconduct and that these events occurred at least
B two decades ago. There was no rhyme or reason for the defendant to have "raked" up the plaintiff's past in connection with the arrest and charge, which ultimately resulted in an acquittal. The defendant was adamant that she was "not reckless" when she wrote the impugned text. We do not think that this was a case of recklessness. Rather, it is a case where the defendant
C was fully aware that the plaintiff had been acquitted of the charges involving financial misconduct but she chose not to disclose this to the participants in the WhatsApp group.

[31] She painted only "half" the picture. She said that she asked the participants to look it up themselves. We do not think that such a disclaimer
D will exonerate the defendant from liability for defamation as she, being the author of the impugned text, must take responsibility for its contents.

[32] It is quite apparent that the defendant deliberately chose not to disclose the fact that the plaintiff had been acquitted of the charges of financial misconduct. Therein lies the element of malice on the defendant's
E part. It is clear and obvious that non-disclosure of the plaintiff's acquittal was deliberate and this was hardly "fair" to the plaintiff.

[33] Thus, having regard to the totality of the facts and circumstances, we are inclined to agree with the submissions that were made on behalf of the F plaintiff that the defendant had displayed an indifferent attitude which significantly warranted an inference of malice. In the circumstances, our finding of malice on the defendant's part demolishes the defence of qualified privilege and fair comment.

[34] Before we leave this topic, we feel it is necessary for us to deal with
G one aspect of the defence of qualified privilege and it is this. The defendant said that her focus was on Mayland and that she brought in the plaintiff and his family so that the participants of the WhatsApp group can make up their own minds.

[35] Of course, there was a need for discussion on the Mayland litigation
H and Mayland's corporate misconduct, but how does the fact that the plaintiff was arrested and charged more than 20 years ago become relevant and necessary for purposes of discussion within the WhatsApp group, especially since he was acquitted more than two decades ago? We do not see any permissible or legitimate purpose for disclosing the facts pertaining to the
I arrest and charge which took place more than 20 years ago.

[36] What we do see is that, the facts pertaining to the arrest and charge against the plaintiff, were carefully juxtaposed with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland and this was a clear and unmistakable invitation to the participants of the WhatsApp group to equate the plaintiff with Mayland, and to reasonably form the view that the plaintiff is dishonest, and a fraudster with a criminal heritage.

[37] In the circumstances, the only relevant and remaining question is whether it is defamatory to publish a statement that the plaintiff was arrested and charged for an offence concerning financial misconduct when it was known to the defendant that the plaintiff had been acquitted several years earlier? Here, the impugned text was circulated on 17 August 2018 when the plaintiff's arrest (and that of his father) took place in the late 1980s and both were acquitted in around 1996. These are facts which were in the public domain and were known to the defendant before she sent the impugned message.

[38] The defendant did her research and was apprised of the fact that the plaintiff and his father were acquitted of the offence with which they were both charged in Hong Kong. She was not mistaken about the status of the criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. She knew that the plaintiff had been acquitted. However, the fact relating to the plaintiff's acquittal was not mentioned in the impugned text.

[39] In cross-examination, the defendant claimed that she was "fair" and not reckless when she wrote about the plaintiff. The defendant said that whilst she did not mention that the plaintiff was acquitted, she also never said that he had been convicted.

[40] As to why she even mentioned the plaintiff in the impugned text, the defendant's answers may be gathered from the following parts of her testimony when she was cross-examined by Dato' Seri Gopal Sri Ram who had conducted the trial and argued the appeal on 15 December 2022. However, regrettably, Dato' Seri Gopal Sri Ram passed away on 29 January 2023. The defendant's testimony was as follows:

GSR No, no. Are you now saying that your, your WhatsApp was a fair statement to David Chiu?

SEEMA Fair comment, yes.

GSR It was fair?

SEEMA Yes.

GSR But it was not true.

SEEMA Everything I wrote was true.

GSR So do you agree with me that if you had included that, that would have been a fairer statement to him?

SEEMA I disagree. Because I said Google this to read more.

GSR No, no. So you left the reader to look out for himself.

SEEMA I wasn't providing any full story. I was just giving some facts. My focus was on Mayland.

SEEMA ... It was all about Mayland and what happened in W&W condo. So I just mentioned certain, certain things in the history of the Chiu family and I wanted the owners to make up their own minds that, google it, read up for yourself. They're all intelligent people.

[41] No doubt the defendant had inserted a disclaimer "Please Google these names to read more" at the end, whereby she had urged the WhatsApp group chat participants to find out more and inform themselves of matters concerning W&W. She said that the impugned text was not meant to be any full account of W&W matters.

[42] In response, counsel for the plaintiff argued before us that there is no duty on the part of the reader to conduct research to ascertain the truth. Thus, if the impugned publication consists of a "half-truth" which gives an untrue or false impression of the plaintiff, then the defendant is liable for having published a false statement of and concerning the plaintiff.

[43] As far as the JC was concerned, his findings were that the impugned text was not defamatory when read in totality and as a whole. The JC opined that upon considering the wordings of the impugned text in totality and as a whole, the natural and ordinary meaning or imputation of the impugned text in the eyes of an objective reader was not defamatory, and instead meant:

(i) that a number of individuals in the Chiu family, including the plaintiff, have been arrested and charged for purported crimes;

(ii) that this was in the past;

(iii) that the plaintiff is the founder and chairman of Mayland; and

(iv) that Mayland has been found guilty of fraud and/or false misrepresentation against the owners of W&W.

[44] The JC held that, in any event, the defendant's pleaded defence of justification has been proven on a balance of probabilities. The JC also held that, in any event, the defendant's pleaded defence of fair comment has been proven on a balance of probabilities. According to the JC, there was no malice on the part of the defendant.

[45] It was submitted for the defendant that the JC had properly and correctly looked at the words used and noted their meanings:

(i) throughout the impugned text, clear words were used to distinguish the fact of the plaintiff's arrest and charges vs the finding of fraud and misrepresentation made against Mayland;

(ii) when the impugned text was about the plaintiff, the defendant used clear words such as "has been in the past arrested and charged", "faced charges" and "purporting" and this is to be distinguished from the wording the defendant used when the impugned text was about Mayland, such as "has been convicted of fraud and misrepresentation";

(iii) the clear dichotomy of the words used between arrested and charged and purporting vs convicted shows the different treatment in the subject of the plaintiff and Mayland; and

(iv) the plaintiff was clearly referred to in a way that was different and distinguishable from Mayland, hence any imputation of fraud, dishonesty, untrustworthiness, misrepresentation, conviction and such can only, if at all, be attributed to Mayland, not the plaintiff.

[46] Thus, the JC agreed with and accepted the defendant's testimony that there was a distinction between those parts of the impugned text which referred to Mayland and those concerning the plaintiff. According to the defendant, the average reasonable reader, not avid for scandal would suspect but would not conclude that the plaintiff was guilty of fraud, misrepresentation or dishonesty.

[47] In our view, the JC erred in accepting the defendant's explanation that there was a so-called "dichotomy" in the way in which the plaintiff and Mayland were described. No doubt different words were used by the defendant in describing the plaintiff as compared with Mayland. But it would be wrong to dissect the impugned text and to view the statements in isolation.

[48] What must be done is to view that impugned text as a whole. And the impugned text as a whole gives the clear impression that the plaintiff is guilty, liable for, or predisposed to dishonesty, fraud or misrepresentation. Therein lies the "sting" of the impugned text.

[49] It is relevant to mention that, on 27 August 2017, Curtis, qua administrator of the WhatsApp group removed the defendant from the WhatsApp group and rebuked her in the following words which were posted in the WhatsApp group:

> Seema you have knowingly posting false and misleading information on this chat group and when questioned have refused to take responsibility.
> I'm not going to take any time explaining to you other than to say your contributions are not constructive and take advantage of the group members' lack of knowledge about our current situation.
> I cannot allow you or anyone to continue a campaign of misinformation.
> Notice to all:
> Verify what you post and take responsibility for it. The people on the chat depended on this information to make intelligent decisions.
> (emphasis added)

[50] Of course, we cannot say anything more about the defendant's removal from the WhatsApp group or as to what had motivated Curtis to do what he did since he did not testify. But it is clear that the impugned text was causally connected to the defendant's removal from the WhatsApp group.

[51] The defendant consistently maintained that what she said in the impugned text about the plaintiff being arrested and charged is true. It was argued that she was just reporting the fact that the plaintiff had been arrested and charged and that this is not to be equated with guilt. According to the defendant, the average reasonably minded reader, not avid for scandal, will not conclude that the plaintiff is guilty of the offences for which he was charged.

[52] Counsel for the defendant referred to the High Court decision in Sivabalan P Asapathy v. The New Straits Times Press (M) Bhd [2010] 7 CLJ 885; [2010] 9 MLJ 320; [2010] MLJU 360 (HC) ("Sivapalan") where the High Court had dismissed the plaintiff's claim for defamation. In that case, the plaintiff who was a self-proclaimed spiritual healer was accused of having raped one of his disciples. The newspaper article gave details of the alleged rape incident but they had couched it in such a manner as not to suggest guilt.

[53] The judge in Sivabalan's case said that the newspaper had merely reported that the plaintiff had been arrested on suspicion of having committed rape. The judge in Sivabalan's case said:

> [18] To my mind, on plain reading of exh. P1, it becomes clear that the news report merely makes an allegation of rape, among others, against the plaintiff as opposed to saying that the plaintiff is guilty of rape and the several other allegations. This is clear from the heading of the news report by the use of the word "alleges" including the use of the words in the body of the news report such as "allegedly" (first paragraph), "apparently" (second paragraph), "suspicion" (third paragraph) and "allegedly" (fourth paragraph). Thus, the "sting" of the offending news report is that the plaintiff is merely suspected or alleged to have committed the several acts referred to and that the police have detained him merely for investigations

[54] We do not think that the defendant can say that the impugned text is just a "mere reporting" and that she could rely on Sivabalan's case. The impugned text here was not "mere reporting". Rather, it was a well-scripted text with a clear purpose to impugn the plaintiff's reputation so that the participants of the WhatsApp group form the view that the plaintiff and Mayland are one and the same and that just as Mayland was found liable for fraud and misrepresentation, the plaintiff too is dishonest and a fraudster as he had been arrested and charged with offences involving financial misconduct.

[55] In The Citizen 1978 (Pty) Ltd v. McBride [2011] 5 LRC 286, the issue of "half-truth" was discussed by Ngcobo CJ in his dissenting judgment where he said:

> [138] Cameron J upholds the fair comment defence in relation to all but the statement that Mr McBride is not contrite.
> He holds that the statement that Mr McBride is not contrite for planting a bomb that killed civilians during the struggle against apartheid is untrue and, to the extent that it is a comment, that it is not supported by facts accurately stated.
> As the facts upon which a fair comment is based must be true, the defence in relation to this statement must fail. I agree. The statement was simply false. However, I am unable to agree with his conclusion in relation to the statement that Mr McBride had a dubious flirtation with alleged gun dealers in Mozambique. This statement is based on a half-truth and is, therefore, also untrue.
> None of the articles that appeared in The Citizen mentioned these facts, in particular, the explanation that the charges were quashed by the Supreme Court of Mozambique. Reference to the quashing of the charges was vital information as it would have enabled the reader to understand why Mr McBride was released. The omission of this information, in my view, resulted in the facts relating to the arrest and release of Mr McBride in Mozambique to be a half-truth. The facts relating to Mozambique were therefore not accurately stated. (emphasis added)

[56] In MD Mineralsearch Inc v. East Kootenay Newspapers Ltd 209 DLR (4th) 375 ("Mineralsearch"), the British Columbian Court of Appeal held as follows:

> The trial judge correctly identified the problem, however, that in some cases a report made up of only true facts may still present an untrue impression. Although the article contained only the true facts of the conviction, it gave an impression of the respondent that the trial judge said 'was misleading and potentially damaging to its reputation'. The respondent's complaint was not about the true contents of the article, but the false impression the article gave that the respondent set out to deceive consumers or potential consumers by committing a 'deceptive business practice'. Because the impression created by the article was false, truth cannot be relied on as a defence. (emphasis added)

[57] Counsel for the plaintiff also referred to the decision of the Indian High Court of V Radhakrishna v. Alla Rama Krishna Reddy 2019 Cri LJ 302 where it was held as follows:

> Sometimes the media present twisted or distorted news that may contain an element of truth but also an element of untruth. This, too, should be avoided because a half-truth can be more dangerous than a total lie.
> (emphasis added)

[58] In Cimolai v. Hall [2005] BCSC 31 para. 173, Justice Holmes opined that the defence of justification will fail if the overall impression of the impugned publication is false. The relevant passage from the judgment reads as follows:

A

> [I]f the overall impression of the publication is false, the defence fails even if some or even all of the literal words are proven to be true. Half-truths can be just as damaging as outright falsehoods, and their effect may be even more severe because they can be more difficult to explain.
> (emphasis added)

B [59] But in the present case, the JC ruled out half-truths as forming part of the Malaysian law of defamation. That finding is at para. 84 of the judgment. It reads as follows:

> 84. P's argument of 'half-truth' is untenable. Malaysian case law show that when an allegation is made, an ordinary reasonable reader would
C understand it to be just an allegation. Stating that P was in the past arrested and charged, which fact and imputation are true, cannot constitute defamation.

[60] The question ultimately is whether the impugned text is defamatory of the plaintiff. We are satisfied that the impugned text is defamatory of the D plaintiff.

[61] In this regard, we have no doubts that the words in the impugned text convey to the ordinary man that the plaintiff is dishonest and a fraudster. That, to our mind, was the real purpose of dragging the plaintiff into the epicentre of the impugned text.

E

[62] Whilst it was legitimate for the defendant to discuss Mayland's conduct, behavior, misconduct or other unlawful activity, the action of the defendant to equate the plaintiff with Mayland and ascribe or impute Mayland's wrongful conduct to the plaintiff by reason of his previous arrest and criminal charge, of which he was acquitted and which was not mentioned
F in the impugned text, renders the impugned text to be inherently and egregiously defamatory of the plaintiff.

[63] As Lord Reid said in Lewis v. Daily Telegraph Ltd [1964] AC 234, [1963] 2 All ER 151, [1963] 2 WLR 1063 (HL) (p. 258 AC) "... more often the sting is not so much in the words themselves as in what the ordinary man
G will infer from them, and that is also regarded as part of their natural and ordinary meaning". The statement in the impugned text which referred to the plaintiff which was juxtaposed with the attack on Mayland's conduct, when considered in the context of the whole article, in its natural and ordinary meaning definitely had the tendency to disparage and injure the plaintiff's
H standing, character and reputation. Those statements definitely had the tendency to excite the adverse opinion of those within the WhatsApp group against the plaintiff.

[64] The defendant had knowledge or means of knowledge that the statement she made about the plaintiff was only a half-truth. This is because I she in her own evidence has referred to media. What the defendant did was merely to insert a so-called "disclaimer" at the end of the posting by asking the recipients to "Google" these names to read more.

[65] Counsel said that this is nothing more than posting a half-truth and asking the readers to look out for themselves, the other half on Google. We agree. The disclaimer does not give the defendant a free pass such that it exonerates her from liability for having defamed the plaintiff. It was argued before us that the defendant cannot be held liable for what she did not write about the plaintiff.

[66] In response, we would say, "the logic is superficially attractive; but the conclusion is suspect'. (See Lord Scarman in Goldsmith v. Sperrings Limited [1977] 2 All ER 566 (CA) at p. 582). And the reason we have given short shrift of this part of the defendant's argument is that the omission to paint the full picture is the very nature and essence of the concept of "half-truth" which establishes liability for defamation in circumstances where the failure to present the requisite information portrayed a false impression in the minds of the ordinary person.

[67] As we explained earlier, first, the defendant failed to give the full picture of the plaintiff's previous legal problems in Hong Kong, and secondly, the plaintiff's previous legal problems in Hong Kong being juxtaposed with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland gave the (false) impression that the plaintiff is a fraudster and is dishonest. Thirdly, there was no legitimate reason or justification for making any reference to the plaintiff in the impugned text. It was done for the obvious purpose of highlighting Mayland's unlawful conduct and to equate the plaintiff with Mayland, and in the process to malign the reputation of the plaintiff.

[68] Thus, as was stated by the British Columbian Court of Appeal in Mineralsearch (supra), "because the impression created by the article was false, truth cannot be relied on as a defence."

[69] Thus, even if the fact that the plaintiff was previously arrested and charged is true, the defence of justification fails as the impression created by the impugned text was one of utter falsity. The false impression that was created was that the plaintiff was convicted, was a dishonest person, and a fraudster.

[70] As we said earlier, the mere mention of the plaintiff's name in the impugned text and juxtaposing the plaintiff's name together with the judicial findings of fraud and misrepresentation against Mayland had the effect of tarnishing the plaintiff's reputation. In short, the plaintiff was defamed because the words used in the impugned article which referred to the plaintiff's arrest and charge had taken a sinister colour by being associated with the other words in the same impugned text relating to Mayland.

A Damages

[71] On the issue of damages, it was argued for the defendant that the plaintiff did not lead evidence on the damages that he had suffered as a result of the defamatory publication. But it is trite that in libel cases, damages are "presumed". See (i) SB Palmer v. AS Rajah & Others [1947] 1 LNS 94; [1949] 15 MLJ 6 (HC); and (ii) Dato' Seri Mohammad Nizar Jamaluddin v. Sistem Televisyen Malaysia Bhd & Anor [2014] 3 CLJ 560; [2014] 4 MLJ 242 (CA) at para. 55.

[72] Here, the impugned text was circulated to a limited group – within the W&W WhatsApp group. Since Curtis administered a rebuke to the defendant about ten days after the impugned text was circulated, it might be presumed that it was or may have been "deleted". At any rate, there is no evidence of any "re-publication". Taking all circumstances into account, we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to RM1.5 million damages as pleaded. As rightly mentioned by the JC, the plea of RM1.5 million in the statement of claim is contrary to O. 18 r. 12 (1A) of the Rules of Court 2012. Considering the plaintiff's status as an international businessman and that the impugned text was not widely circulated and was sent to the participants of the WhatsApp group, damages in the sum of RM100,000 would be fair and reasonable to vindicate the plaintiff's reputation which has been sullied by the impugned text.

Outcome

[73] For the reasons as stated above, we find that there are merits in the appeal as the learned Judicial Commissioner was plainly wrong in holding that the impugned text was not defamatory of the plaintiff and in further holding that the defence of justification, qualified privilege and fair comment succeeds.

[74] As such, we allowed the plaintiff's appeal and set aside the Judicial Commissioner's said decision dated 23 June 2021 and entered judgment for the plaintiff. We awarded damages in the sum of RM100,000 with interest thereon at 5% per annum from 23 June 2021 until the date of full payment or realisation.

[75] We also order that a permanent injunction be granted to restrain the defendant from publishing or spreading the impugned text or similar defamatory words of and concerning the plaintiff. As for costs, since the High Court granted post-trial costs of RM80,000, the same amount should now be awarded to the plaintiff in addition to the costs of this appeal. We, therefore, awarded costs of RM100,000 (being RM80,000 (High Court costs) plus RM20,000 (Court of Appeal costs) which is subject to payment of allocator.
